Informing Policy Decisions Within and About a Health System

Thursday, May 9, 2013 1200-1300 ET

Learning Objectives:

- To appreciate how policy decisions look very different depending on whether you're trying to change the programs, services and drugs on offer or the system that determines whether the 'right' mix of programs and services get to the right people
- To understand the similarities and differences in the types of research evidence and the types of evidence synthesis that are relevant to these two types of policy decisions
- To discuss the implications of these two types of policy decisions for knowledge-translation efforts targeting policymakers
